What May Just Seem Like a Mess.....

Sometimes I spill food or drinks on my clothes – Im still learning how to hold utensils and building on my self-help skills to feed and look after my growing body.

If my shirt is a little wet today it is because I have been exploring water play building on early mathematical concepts in play such as volume and measurement.

There maybe some playdough imprinted in my clothes – but that is because I leant on it while making playdough creations with my peers sharing with them across the playdough table.

Do my clothes seem a little sandy? It is because I've been working on my social skills sharing and working together to problem solve and build sandcastles with my friends in the sandpit.

There maybe some playdough imprinted in my clothes – but that is because I leant on it while making playdough creations with my peers sharing with them across the playdough table.

I know it looks like I have just been painting on my clothes, but I did wear an apron. I was just busy working on my fine motor skills and creative flare. I'm still learning how to hold tools to paint and where to put my paint to make creations.

Grow
Early Education

Is Actually Evidence of Learning.